LENOVO'S M&A TRACK RECORD AND RECENT ACQUISITIONS

Since closing its acquisition of IBM's personal computer business and ThinkPad line in 2005, it has successfully managed six integrations including the joint venture with NEC in Japan, the acquisition of Medion in Germany, the acquisition of CCE in Brazil, the strategic partnership and joint venture with EMC in the US, the acquisition of Stoneware in the US and its joint venture with Compal in China. During this time, Lenovo has become the world's number one PC company, number 2 PC + Tablet maker, number three Smart Connected Device maker, all while growing revenue and profitability many times over.

Lenovo's recently announced investments in Motorola Mobility and the IBM server business are logical next steps in the successful "PC Plus" strategy. Upon close of the IBM server transaction, Lenovo will be the number 3 server player globally in a business with higher margins than PCs. With Motorola's close, Lenovo becomes a strong number three smartphone maker. A range of cost saving and scaling opportunities, the iconic Motorola brand and the opportunity to expand Motorola's global reach will quickly place this business on a path to tangible success. Upon close, Lenovo firmly believes they will accelerate the geographical reach and competitiveness of its existing smartphone, tablet and server businesses, while ensuring future growth is even stronger and more sustainable.
